

Develop Ethics

Ethics are personal beliefs about situations, usually falling in the "gray" area between right and wrong. Usually, a person's life lessons reflects his/her ethics. Ethics are mostly passive, whereas morals are more active. Ethics are what a person uses to guide her/his actions, but usually are not definite enough to make a person of average aggression enforce them on others. Developing a strong set of ethics is important to building a character of integrity.

Joseph Kaluza

Development of personal ethics is so important. Knowing your boundaries and principles. Beginning a personal code of ethics shows that you're maturing and looking for respect and responsibility, and can be trusted.

Melanie Coulas

ETHICS are codes of morals. They keep us on positive tracks in life. Ethics and morals can be passed on to you from your family and can be taught, but in the end, it all comes down to you and what you feel is right.

Elizabeth Linsley

Ethics are the owning of morals. people who have ethics also own a moral code. They believe in doing the right thing. Although, sometimes circumstances make us act up, and we act against our morals. But then most people feel guilt. These are people with ethics. Ethics are the belief of what is good, according to the society in which you live.

Lilly Field

I think of Ethics as principles-the little rules you set yourself to pave your way through life. The way you develop your Ethics affects the way you move through life: A life with no ethics is a plain that's too open-you are free to do what you want without considering others. Then there are those who's ethics are so tightly constricted that they pick their way through a prickly maze-too constricted to think creatively. There are also those that develop their ethics in moderation they walk through a beautiful garden, watching out for the plants and fellow strollers along the way, but still able to move freely enough to experience some wonderful things. Developing your ethics is an important part in your peacemaking process because you have to be able to make piece without treading on the plants of the aforementioned gardens, but you have to explore all the paths to find the best way of keeping Peace:)

Melissa Brooks

Ethics are the rules you live your life by. They are determined by your morals. As with many things in life, you can't have one without having, in some form, the other. Ethics lead you on the right track. Many of us don't even realize how big a part ethics play in our everyday lives. Everyday, we use our ethical beliefs to govern ourselves. It isn't a matter of forming ethics as much as it is developing them. To develop ethics takes a lifetime. Everyone is constantly at a different place in their lives and therefore their ethics, morals, and values are always changing. Developing ethics takes patience, thought, and care.
