How do you grow your legacy?

It's the little things that all add up to the one BIG thing you are known for.

What do you want people to say about you when you're gone? What story is your life writing that will be left for generations to come? These are deep questions to ponder about what kind of legacy your life will leave. Here are 7 ways on how to leave a legacy.

1. Live your legacy.
2. Live like you mean it.
3. Love like your life depended on it (it does).
4. Share your story.
5. Be honest.
6. Ground your purpose in a greater purpose.
7. Live for others.

Make an IMPACT today.

It's never too early to start leaving your legacy; right where you are and in your own way.

How do we do that? Where do we start?

1. Build relationships.
2. Listen more than you talk.
3. See a need, fill a need.
4. Say yes.
5. Take ACTION.

As educators, we all know the importance of building positive relationships with and among our students. Good relationships can help students develop a growth mindset, encourage kindness in the classroom, increase students' learning, improve students' self-confidence, and make your classroom feel welcoming. We also know, however, that creating these relationships in our classrooms can be challenging, especially when we have limited time and resources. That's where these quick relationship building activities come in! In this post, I have created a list of 8 relationship building activities that can easily fit into your busy schedule, will help you connect with your kiddos, and will help your students bond with one another.

Relationship Building Activities: 5 Minutes or Less

These relationship building activities are super quick, so they can fit into any short gaps you have during the day. Each one takes 5 minutes or less and requires no prep.

1. Non-Academic Turn & Talk

If you're a teacher, you have probably have heard of "turn and talk", a strategy where students turn to each other and answer a question or discuss a topic. Usually, "turn and talk" is used in an academic context. However, you can use it in a non-academic way to boost relationships in your classroom! To do so, you ask a non-academic question, such as "What is your favorite color?". Then, students can turn to a partner and answer! This is an easy way to get your kids sharing with each other and takes very little time.

2. Hug, High Five, or Handshake

For this activity, each student can choose to give you a hug, a high five, or a handshake. This is used most commonly as students are arriving for the day or leaving at the end of the day, but it could be used at any time. For example, as students are leaving for specials, at the beginning of recess, before students go into the cafeteria for lunch, at the beginning of each small group, or any other time you want a quick dose of connection with your kids.

3. End-of-the-Day Exit Slip

We all know that exit slips are given at the end of lessons to check for student understanding. End-of-the-day exit slips, however, are not about academic context. Instead, an end-of-the-day exit slip is a non-academic question that students must answer before they go home. They could answer in writing or in person (e.g. tell you their answer as they walk out for dismissal). Either way, an end-of-the-day exit slip is a great way to bond with your kids after a busy school day. Some questions you could ask are:

- What was your favorite part of the day?
- What was the best thing you learned today?
- What is one kind thing you did for someone today?
- What do you hope to learn about tomorrow?
- What was the best thing you did during specials today?

Relationship Building Activities: 15 Minutes

These relationship building activities take slightly more time, but are still relatively quick. Use these whenever you need a boost to your student relationships, but only have a small chunk of time.

1. Just Like Me Game

If you want to spend some time helping your students learn about one another while having some fun, the Just Like Me game is perfect. Here's how you play:

- Have your students stand in a circle.
- One at a time, students step forward and say a fact about themselves (e.g. I have one sister.).
- If that statement is true for other students, they come forward one step and say "just like me"!
- The next student steps forward and says his or her fact. Continue until all students have had a chance to go (and you could keep going, if you have time).

2. Round Robin Share

For this activity, students also share something about themselves. Unlike the Just Like Me game, however, students can share a bit more during this activity. Here's what you do:

1. Have your students sit in a circle.
2. Ask a non-academic question. (e.g. What's your favorite season? Why?)
3. Go around the circle and give every student the opportunity to answer the question while the rest of the class listens.
4. Optional: If you want, you could give some other students a chance to make a comment or ask a question after each student shares.

Relationship Building Activities: 30 Minutes

These relationship building activities take a bit longer, usually about 30 minutes. If you feel your relationships with your students need a major dose of positivity, try these activities.

1. Mystery Student Lunch Bunch

This activity is super fun, and will improve behavior in your classroom! Here's what you do:

1. Each week, draw a student's name (or more than one, if you want). I recommend writing each student's name on a popsicle stick and putting the sticks in a cup/jar/etc (which you can also use to call on random students to answer questions during class). The chosen student is a mystery to the class – only you know who it is!
2. Throughout the week, you observe the mystery student's behavior.
3. If the mystery student had positive behavior the whole week, then he or she gets to have lunch bunch on Friday! You can also let the student (or students) choose friends to join them for lunch bunch, or you can make it a whole class lunch in the classroom. Also, if the mystery student does not earn lunch bunch, DO NOT reveal the student's name to the class. This will only make that student feel ashamed and may even lead to worse behavior.
4. Not only does this motivate students to behave during the week, but it also gives you a chance to bond with the students who earn lunch bunch. I call that a win-win situation!

2. Get To Know You Board Game

This activity gives students the opportunity to learn about one another and play a game at the same time! During this game, students take turns rolling a die and moving that many spaces. Then, they answer the question on the space they land on. The questions are all designed to help students learn about each other and create connections.

3. All About Me Initials

These All About Me Initials are a great way to have students share more about themselves in a fun way. To do this activity, give each student a letter for each initial (so I would get a V and an S, because my name is Victoria Skinner). Then, students can write or draw about themselves in those letters. You can either give students specific things to write/draw (such as their favorite foods, their family, what they like to do, etc.) or leave it open-ended. After students complete their initials, you can hang them up in the classroom or the hallway!

All of these relationship building activities will help you build a positive classroom community. You can use them from the very first week of school until the very last day of the year. I hope you found something useful for you and your students to use! If you need some reminders, get this cheat sheet to help you out. Do you have any other great ways to build relationships in the classroom? If so, send me an email or leave a comment below!

BE A GOOD READING BUDDY

Top tips...

Make eye contact and remember to smile.

Be reliable and on time.

Be sensitive and encouraging.

Use a welcoming tone of voice.

Always start and finish with something positive.

Use your initiative - you don't always have to talk about the book.

CHOOSING THE RIGHT BOOK WITH YOUR BUDDY

Start with a small range of books

1 Read the title and author.

2 Talk about the cover.

3 Read the back.

4 Flip through the book.

5 Open the book to any page. Put one finger up for each word your Buddy does not know.

6
0-1. Too easy
2-3. Perfect choice
4. Give it a try
5. Too hard

FICTION: PROMPT QUESTIONS

Remember to check your Buddy's understanding...

"Who are the characters in the book?"

"Where is the story set?"

"What do you think is happening?"

"What did... do/ask?"

"What happened after/at...?"

"Do you know what might happen next?"

https://projectread.org.uk/?page_id=727

NON-FICTION: PROMPT QUESTIONS

Remember to talk to your Buddy...

"What do you want to find out?"

"What do you already know about this topic?"

"Shall we look at the contents page first?"

"What did you find interesting on this page?"

"What else would you like to know about this topic?"

HELPING YOUR BUDDY ALONG

When your Buddy gets stuck on a word, give thinking time. If your Buddy still can't work it out, try these tips...

"Try breaking down the word into smaller sections."

"Read the whole line again."

Talk about what the word means. If you both don't know... go and find out!

Write down the words that your Buddy gets stuck on. Talk about them again.

BIG UP YOUR BUDDY

Things you could say...

"You're really improving! Well done!"

"That word was a hard one! I'm impressed! You're doing well!"

"Good question."

"Wow, you've really understood that!"

SO YOU'VE FINISHED READING FOR TODAY...NOW WHAT?

Have a conversation with your Buddy. Talk about these questions...

"Are you enjoying our sessions? Why? Why not?"

"Which is the best book/ comic/ poem we have read together?"

"Do you think we should recommend any of the books/ comics/ poems we've read to other Buddies?"

"What would you like to read next?"

GETTING EXCITED ABOUT READING

To be a reading role model you can talk about...

...why you like to read.

...what you are reading at the moment.

...books you have read in the past.

...different kinds of reading - books, comics, magazines and websites.

HOW IS YOUR BUDDY REALLY DOING?

At the end of each session, think about these questions...

Did your Buddy enjoy the session?

Is your Buddy reading more outside of your sessions together?

Is your Buddy becoming more confident?

Is your Buddy's reading improving?

What will you do in your next session to make sure that your Buddy keeps improving?
